The Small Business Advocacy Council will be represented by SBAC President and Co-Founder, Elliot Richardson, on Governor-Elect Pritzker's Job Creation and Economic Opportunity Transition Committee.

"We are excited and honored that our non-partisan advocacy efforts, which are laser-focused on empowering the small business community and improving our economy, provided us this opportunity to have input on the new administration's business and economic development agenda," said Richardson. "We look forward to representing small and local businesses on the committee."

The committee is tasked with providing guidance on initiatives to ensure access to capital for entrepreneurs, increase economic development and job opportunities for all communities, and encourage long-lasting prosperity in our state. The SBAC is a non-partisan, member driven organization that advocates for the small business community. Some of the SBAC's recent successes include lowering Illinois' previously excessive LLC fees, ensuring small business owners can be heard before regulations are enacted and passing legislation that encourages economic development in local communities.
